

Listed below are six possible sources that might appear on a bibliography for a paper on Wuthering Heights. Your task is simply to write a properly formatted Works Cited entry for each item. Then arrange these elements as one would for a Works Cited page, type it up, and bring a clean printed copy to the next class. (As usual, I would also appreciate it if you could send me an email with the exercise as an attachment.) You can find an example of what the finished page should look like on page 321 of the MLA Handbook (6th ed).

---

Cooke, Simon: "'The Ever-Shifting Kaleidoscope of the Imagination': Modern Illustrations to the Brontës" Brontë Studies: The Journal of the Brontë Society, (31:1), 2006 Mar, 7-22. (2006)

Mason, Emma: "The Clue to the Brontës?: Methodism and Wuthering Heights" In (pp. 69-77) Knight, Mark (ed. and introd.); Woodman, Thomas (ed. and introd.), Biblical Religion and the Novel, 1700-2000. Burlington, VT: Ashgate, 2006. viii, 170 pp.. (2006)

Caesar, Judith: "Brontë's Wuthering Heights" Explicator, (63:3), 2005 Spring, 149-51. (2005)

Golden, Catherine J.: "Images of the Woman Reader in Victorian British and American Fiction" Gainesville, FL: UP of Florida, 2003. 287 pp.. (Includes illustrations.). (2003)

Birns, Nicholas.: review of Caldwell, Janis McLarren. "Literature and medicine in nineteenth-century Britain: from Mary Shelley to George Eliot." Literature and Medicine (24:2) 2005, 318-21. (2005)

A website (<http://www2.sbbs.se/hp/cfalk/bronteng.htm>) that looks like this:

The Brontë Sisters

On this page you will find an extensive collection of links to pages in connection with the Brontë sisters.

Back to Cecilia's Home Page!

© CECILIA FALK

LAST MODIFIED: 20 FEBRUARY, 2006